

War and its PTSD in children

Sajadi A; MSc1

Abstract

Background: war is a disastrous event. Unfortunately, children are the most vulnerable populations that become affected by war. Studies have reported most prevalence rate of PTSD among children who were living in refugee camps compared to suffer from political violence. Thus children are considered as victims of war and terror.

Materials and methods: This review article have been searched through internet by the following key words: PTSD, war and child, psychological trauma

Results: Trauma can affect on ability and mental health in children. Family and community are the main resources that affect the ability of human beings to cope with stressful situations. Therefore early identification of PTSD and refer children and families as soon as possible are a significant priority of mental health.

Keywords: PTSD, psychical trauma, war and child

1- Instructor, Army University of medical sciences. Faculty of nursing.